The Magill Brothers Bank
800 Rose St.

The Magill Brothers Bank

The Magill Brothers Bank (Exchange State Bank) and Masonic Temple Buildings were constructed together in 1887. The building was designed by Architect William Parker and constructed by Frank De Lorean. At the time, it was the most substantial building in the village of North La Crosse, now part of the City of La Crosse. The structure features multi-wythe brick walls with limestone trim and pressed metal cornices. The bank building also features the iconic octagonal oriel window with metal shingle roof above the entrance. The Masonic Temple building originally wrapped around the bank forming an "L" shape. The back portion of building housed the Masonic Meeting Hall on the second floor.

The earliest known occupants of the building were the Magill Brothers Bank having the first floor and basement of 800 Rose Street. A physician's office was located on second floor above the bank. The City Directory lists Dr. Mary F Barry in the space. The first floor at 802 Rose Street had a grocery store run by Thomas LaVake. The back of the building fronting on St. Cloud Street had a flour and feed store run by John Turnbull. This may explain the large arched opening that was formerly located next to the storefront. It was sized to back a horse drawn wagon into the space. The second floor above both the grocery and the feed and flour spaces was entirely occupied by the Masonic Lodge.

The Magill Brothers changed the name of the bank to Exchange State Bank. This institution stayed in the space until 1962 when they moved to a new location. The doctor's office above the bank stayed into the 1930's before changing to an attorney's office. During the course of renovating the upper level, contractor Bob Bice signed and dated the old walls behind the drywall he was installing. He indicated that the renovation work was in progress February 1948. This coincides with a chiropractor occupying the space, Nordby Gunnar is listed as the owner. The grocery store stayed on the first floor of 802 Rose Street into the 1920s. At some point, the name changes to Mulder Grocery. Apparently after 1924 the Masonic Temple occupied both floors of their building. This date probably coincides with a major remodel of the entire space.

The storefront at 802 now has vertical score brick which was not available in the 1880s, but was very common by the 1920s. The Masons stayed in the space into the 1970s, but by 1978 the directory lists both sides of the building as vacant. Buzz's Bikes moved into the bank side of the building in 1979. This iconic business remained in the space until 2014 when the building again became vacant. The Masonic side of the building was vacant for over a decade and during this time became severely dilapidated. Leaks developed in the roof and rotted significant portions of the structure. In 2010 the roof over the Masonic Hall collapsed which necessitated demolishing the back portion of the building. After Buzz's Bikes vacated the building is sat vacant for a few more years with talks of demolishing the structure. The City of La Crosse took proposals from a number of developers and in the summer of 2017 accepted the proposal of RMD Development, LLC and sold them the property.

RMD Development is a group of individuals who are dedicated to preserving historic buildings for current and future generations. The group includes a developer and restaurant owner, a preservation architect, and two preservation contractors.

With rehabilitation work nearing completion, the community celebrated a ribbon cutting and grand opening of the GreenHouse Holistic Salon & Wellness Co-Op in October of 2019. The two upstairs apartments are nearing completion, which will mark the first time the upper level has been fully occupied since the 1970s. Returning this northside landmark to its former glory is almost complete!
